The Daily Press.

HONGKONG, FEBRUARY 16th, 1877.

The mortality returns for this Colony during 1876, published in the Gazette of Saturday, show that that year was unusually healthy.

This annual death-rate for the British and foreign population, after deducting non-residents, was only 22.92 per 1,000 for the whole population, compared with 25.94 in 1875, 25.94 in 1874, and 24.48 in 1873.

This is a very favourable return for a semi-tropical climate, and is a much lower death-rate than that of most large towns in the United Kingdom.

Something may, it is said, be put down to the exceptionally cool summer enjoyed here last year, but even taking the rate of the previous year, 25.94, as the average, it is by no means high, and indicates for Hongkong the reputation of being a healthy place.

The mortality among the natives was rather higher last year than in 1875, and this is partly to be explained by the number of deaths resulting from small-pox.

The last quarter of the year has swelled the native death-rate very considerably, it being no less than 84.16 per 1,000 for the quarter.

The deaths from small-pox among the Chinese are again very numerous, but those from exposure stand at the top of the list, showing that carelessness, poverty, and neglect are accountable for a considerable proportion of the mortality.

Pituitia, debility, and diarrhoea head the list of fatal diseases among the European and American residents.

The number of births among the British and foreign community is to be noticed, exceeds that of the deaths considerably.

The returns are very satisfactory as far as the Europeans are concerned, but the increased mortality among the native population points, it is to be feared, to an insupportable condition of the streets of Hongkong.

In fact, there is no doubt that the drainage, &c., of the native quarter is susceptible to great improvement, and it is to be hoped that the Surveyor-General will soon be authorized to inaugurate some sweeping measures of reform in these streets.

It is most important that the drainage of all parts of Victoria should be properly provided for, in order to avoid the outbreak of fever and epidemics.

Health should be a first consideration everywhere, and too great care cannot be taken by the Government to secure this invaluable boon to the residents of this Colony, whether British, foreign, or native.

The latest information furnished by the Russian Eastern Question, if reliable, is a Russian army numbering two hundred thousand men, provided with seven hundred and twenty guns, has, it is stated in a telegram published elsewhere, been concentrated at Kischineff, in Bessarabia, and is held in readiness to cross the Danube.

The last telegram received now looks very like a confirmation of this report. According to that the negotiations for peace have been suspended, and the British Government was protesting against action being used towards Turkey. It would be inferred from this that Russia had taken up a hostile position and intended war.

The latest of this army, being assembled on the borders renders the outbreak of hostilities almost a certainty.

Of course, there is the chance that the Czar only intends to make a display of force, hoping thereby to overawe Turkey and to induce the Porte to grant some concessions; though this, it must be admitted, is scarcely likely, having regard to the unyielding spirit displayed by the Turks all through the negotiations.

If the Russians do mean business, they have chosen a bad season of the year for commencing operations. There have recently been great floods all over Europe, and the Danube, in all probability, laid a good deal of the adjoining country under water.

Moreover, the weather has been severe, and the troops would suffer greatly from exposure.

The Russians are less, perhaps, about the condition of their men than some European nations, as they can more readily make up for losses in the ranks, and have less consideration for the value of human life.

From Kischineff their army will probably march southwards through Moldavia, cross the Danube below its junction with the Pruth, and enter Bulgaria.

Whether they would be allowed to cross the Danube without opposition is another matter. The Turks have, according to our London correspondents, massed some one hundred and fifty thousand men in Bulgaria, with the intention of resisting any attempt at the occupation of that province by Russia.

It is to be feared that the war, if it should break out, cannot be localised. The action of the British Government in ordering Sir WILLIAM JERVOIS to Australia to make arrangements for the fortification of its coast would appear to indicate manifestation of great and serious—perhaps—protracted war, the end of which cannot easily be foreseen.

The political situation at the present moment is undoubtedly extremely ominous, and no one need be surprised to hear any day that the first shots have been exchanged between the Muscovite and the Ottoman, and a bloody war of race, religion, and mutual rivalry inaugurated, into which the other leading Powers may eventually be all more or less involved.

Europe has too often been a vast camp, in which contending nations have struggled for the supremacy, and it is to be feared that this question has once more to be decided.

The officers and crews of H.M. gunboat Gravel, Midg, and Swing were paid off on Saturday morning, and the vessels were recommissioned for the same day.

Commander Henry G. Salmon said remaining command of the Midg.

Notice is given in Saturday's Gazette that, in accordance with the provisions of the Public Health Act, 1875, the Secretary of State for the Colonies, all applications made for the direct clearance of British ships from port, whatever of the State Sanitary Board will be complied with.

The flower show continued open on Saturday afternoon, basing on the weather.

It was not very largely attended. The prize challenge now for vegetables has fallen to the lot of Mr. Dicks, who certainly had a very fine collection at the show and last prize in a great many classes.

The judges have a yet come to a decision with regard to the prize challenge cup for flowers. A special prize was awarded to Mr. Holmes for three cacti shown in the first foliage class.

The members of the Amateur Dramatic Club will give a performance at the Theatre Royal, on the 21st evening. The piece selected for representation is the popular comedy, "And the Winner Takes the Prize."

The Amateur with so much success last season. The cast is the same as before, and the piece will, it is expected, be a very fine representation of the play.
